(Channeling begins)

Djwhal Khul here. Tashi Delek.

Alright. Now, Earth Day celebrates four decades this year, 2010, four decades of Earth Day ceremony. And so, I thought it would be good to take a look at the changes that have occurred that are beneficial to the environment, Mother Earth, humanity and, really, much beyond the scope of your current concept of eco-friendly or environmental.

The best example that I can give of how there are no boundaries in Creation is that, you know, you think maybe "Well, I can dump this can of paint into the river and it will flow downstream. It won't bother me anymore." Well, it literally is. You know enough about the environment to follow the energy in the pollution, the effect of fish are tainted and people eat the fish and people become tainted, and it goes on and on and on.

In the spiritual center of the planetary consciousness, all records, if you will, are shared cosmically. So if your environment, just even on a literal basis, say there is a hole in the ozone. That is polluting, if you will, the space around the planet.

So, I am viewing forty years of celebrating Earth Day as having a very positive impact. The newer generations are much more aware. Recycling, composting, all the things that support living in harmony with the planet for a long period of time are either in place or coming into place.

So, this is just maybe a good time to bring the reminder of working within your own physical structure to nullify toxins.

And just to make a comment too, because we have so much going on with volcanoes and earthquakes and a lot of other things going on here, that, environmentally speaking, from the drug intake, prescription drugs being the second cause of death in the United States of America, and seeing more global distribution of certain things. Some I think are necessary certainly in life saving. Others are simply either not needed, could be done naturally or, you know, a lifestyle change could take place to eliminate them.

But my next concern is the level of drugs getting, as you eliminate, getting back into the Earth and back into the environment, into the air, into the fish, into the water, therefore into other humans, wildlife, etc. So, that is the direction I would point in over the next decade, is to reduce drug intake as much as possible.

Alright, dear Ones. That is my spirituality article information for this particular week.

As always, thank you and my love to you,

Djwhal Khul
